Nate Carden focuses on both planning and controversies arising in connection with transfer pricing and related international tax issues. Building on several years of experience as a management consultant with McKinsey & Co. and law clerk for Hon. Diane P. Wood of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, Mr. Carden specifically concentrates on the tax aspects of ongoing business operations. He works with corporate and other clients across many industries, with a particular focus on technology, media, life sciences, and consumer products companies.

Transfer Pricing and Operational Planning

Mr. Carden's transfer pricing and operational planning practice focuses on planning and pre-audit issues arising from cross-border intangible property, service and financing transactions. He also has provided advice and related documentation concerning cross-border transactions and applying U.S. and Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) transfer pricing rules.

Select representations include:

- large technology companies in the development and modification of intangible ownership structures in response to U.S. and international tax law changes;
- large multinational companies in the tax aspects of operational integration following significant mergers and acquisitions;
- large multinational corporations in connection with supply chain reorganizations intended to increase value of business units prior to disposition;
- global food and consumer brands companies in strategic reviews of worldwide transfer pricing positions and impact on foreign tax credits;
- various operating companies in providing counsel concerning transfer pricing, valuation, compliance and other operating issues relating to conversion into and operation as specialty REITs;
- several pre-revenue companies in evaluating and executing operating models for products under development; and
- corporate taxpayers in privilege, work product and document retention issues arising in connection with financial audits and the application of FIN 48/ASC 740.

Tax Controversy

Mr. Carden's dispute resolution practice emphasizes the representation of corporate taxpayers in pre-audit, audit, administrative appeal and litigation proceedings. He focuses on resolving substantive tax disputes and addressing discovery and evidentiary privilege issues arising from financial audits, IRS examination and litigation.

Select representations include:

- global software and technology companies in disputes with the IRS and other tax authorities in disputes concerning licenses and transfers of operating intangibles;
- multinational companies in connection with bilateral and multilateral disputes regarding the treatment of intangible development, licensing and services;
- global consumer products companies in disputes with various tax authorities concerning operations in the U.S., Mexico and Canada;

- global software and medical technology companies in disputes with the IRS and other tax authorities concerning the fees charged for supply chain, contract research and IT-enabled services performed in India, Singapore, China and other locations;
- various multinational companies in disputes with the IRS over the tax consequences of cross-border licensing, cost sharing, Section 936 conversion and similar transactions;
- large multinational corporations before IRS Examination and Appeals in complex corporate audits involving multiple U.S. federal consolidated groups;
- several non-U.S.-based companies and investment funds concerning lending into the United States;
- a non-U.S.-based company concerning various applications of the consolidated return regulations to intercompany sales; and
- corporate taxpayers in internal investigations in anticipation of IRS audits.
