Alyssa Clover's practice involves a broad spectrum of complex civil, criminal and regulatory matters, including white collar criminal defense and related civil litigation, SEC enforcement actions, internal investigations, tortious interference claims and contract disputes. Ms. Clover also has represented clients in private mediations and arbitrations. Ms. Clover's experience includes:

- representing a Kuwaiti logistics company against a criminal indictment and civil False Claims Act charges in one of the largest government contracting cases ever brought by the U.S. government;
- representing a "Big Four" accounting firm in regulatory (SEC and PCAOB) matters involving its clients;
- conducting internal investigations for clients involving SEC matters;
- representing a "Big Four" accounting firm in mediations and a successful private arbitration involving disputes with former clients alleging breach of contract and alleged malpractice claims;
- representing a nationwide retailer of tools, equipment and accessories in state and federal litigations brought against its former employees and a market competitor for, among other claims, copyright infringement, violation of the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act, interference with economic advantage, unfair business practices and breach of contract; and
- defending a global media and entertainment company against claims for tortious interference with a contract.

An active pro bono attorney, Ms. Clover has worked on a variety of matters, including representing clients in bringing affirmative claims for housing violations and defending clients in unlawful detainer actions.

Ms. Clover is a member of the hiring committee for Skadden's Los Angeles office. While attending Emory University School of Law, Ms. Clover was a Robert W. Woodruff Fellow and a member of the Emory Law Journal.
