

892 F.3d 1142

United States Court of Appeals, Eleventh Circuit.

Jyll BRINK, on her own behalf, and on behalf of those similarly situated, Plaintiff-Appellant, v.

RAYMOND JAMES & ASSOCIATES,
INC., Defendant-Appellee.

No. 16-14144

|

(June 8, 2018)

Synopsis

Background: Passport account customer brought putative class action against brokerage firm alleging that customers were charged flat-rate processing fee that included undisclosed profit contrary to passport account agreement, which stated that such fees were not commissions, and asserting state-law claims for breach of contract and negligence. The United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, No. 0:15-cv-60334-WPD, 2016 WL 3950030, dismissed for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. Customer appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Jill Pryor, Circuit Judge, held that customer's breach of contract and negligence claims were not precluded by Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act (SLUSA).

Reversed and remanded.

West Headnotes (10)

[1] Federal Civil Procedure

🔑 Construction of pleadings

Federal Civil Procedure

🔑 Matters deemed admitted; acceptance as true of allegations in complaint

At the motion to dismiss stage, a court accepts all factual allegations in the complaint as true and construes them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Courts

🔑 Securities regulation

The Court of Appeals reviews de novo a district court's conclusion that the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act (SLUSA) precludes a plaintiff from bringing state law claims. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 28, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78bb\(f\)\(1\)\(A\).

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Securities Regulation

🔑 Manipulative, Deceptive or Fraudulent Conduct

Federal law broadly prohibits deception, misrepresentation, and fraud in connection with the purchase or sale of any security.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Securities Regulation

🔑 Pleading

Securities Regulation

🔑 Damages

Securities Regulation

🔑 Costs and Expenses; Attorney Fees

The Private Securities Litigation Reform Act (PSLRA) implements multiple reforms in the context of private federal securities fraud lawsuits, including heightened pleading requirements and limitations on recoverable damages and attorney fees. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 21D, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78u-4.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Securities Regulation

🔑 Fraudulent or other prohibited practices

States

🔑 Securities and exchange regulations

Congress enacted the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act (SLUSA) to stem the shift from federal to state courts and prevent certain state private securities class action lawsuits alleging fraud from being used to frustrate the objectives of the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act (PSLRA). Securities Exchange Act of 1934 §§ 21D, 28, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 78u-4, 78\(f\)\(1\)\(A\).

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Securities Regulation

 🔑 Fraudulent or other prohibited practices
 States

 🔑 Securities and exchange regulations

A “covered class action,” within the meaning of the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act (SLUSA) provision prohibiting class actions alleging state law causes of action based on conduct that constitutes federal securities fraud, is a lawsuit in which damages are sought on behalf of more than 50 people. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 28, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78bb\(f\)\(1\)\(A\).

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Securities Regulation

 🔑 Fraudulent or other prohibited practices
 States

 🔑 Securities and exchange regulations

A “covered security,” within the meaning of the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act (SLUSA) provision prohibiting class actions alleging state law causes of action based on conduct that constitutes federal securities fraud, is one traded nationally and listed on a regulated national exchange. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 28, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78bb\(f\)\(1\)\(A\).

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Brokers

 🔑 Actions for Negligence or Wrongful Acts of Broker

 States

 🔑 Particular cases, preemption or supersession

Any misrepresentation by brokerage firm regarding passport account's flat-rate processing fee, which purportedly included undisclosed profit contrary to passport account agreement's statement that such fees were not commissions, was not material, and, thus, passport account customer's breach of contract and negligence claims in putative class action were not precluded by Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act (SLUSA), since choice of type of investment account was not intrinsic to investment decision itself, customers chose to trade securities with full knowledge of amount of processing fee for each trade, even if it included profit instead of merely covering transaction execution and clearing costs, and customers never paid more than they agreed. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 28, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78bb\(f\)\(1\)\(A\).

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Securities Regulation

 🔑 Fraudulent or other prohibited practices
 States

 🔑 Securities and exchange regulations

It is appropriate to look to the meaning of materiality in securities fraud cases brought under § 10(b) and Rule 10-5 to understand the materiality requirement in the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act (SLUSA) provision prohibiting class actions alleging state law causes of action based on conduct that constitutes federal securities fraud. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 28, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78bb\(f\)\(1\)\(A\).

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Securities Regulation

 🔑 Fraudulent or other prohibited practices
 States

 🔑 Securities and exchange regulations

For the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act (SLUSA) to preclude a state law class action alleging causes of action based on conduct that constitutes federal securities fraud, the misrepresentation must make a significant difference to someone's decision to purchase or to sell a covered security. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 28, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78bb\(f\)\(1\)\(A\).

Cases that cite this headnote

1144 Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, D.C. Docket No. 0:15-cv-60334-WPD

Attorneys and Law Firms

Eric Mathew Sodhi, Sodhi Spoont PLLC, Miami Beach, FL, Darren Craig Blum, Blum Law Group, Fort Lauderdale, FL, Manuel A. Garcia-Linares, Mark A. Romance, Richman Greer, PA, Miami, FL, Sara Elizabeth Hanley, Randall Charles Place, Law Offices of Place & Hanley, PLLC, Naples, FL, Lyle E. Shapiro, Herskowitz Shapiro, PLLC, Miami, FL, Joshua Lee Spoont, Sodhi Spoont PLLC, Miami Beach, FL, for Appellant.

Samuel Wayne Braver, Buchanan Ingersoll & Rooney, PC, Pittsburgh, PA, Hala A. Sandridge, G. Calvin Hayes, Buchanan Ingersoll & Rooney, PC, Tampa, FL, for Appellee.

Before JORDAN and JILL PRYOR, Circuit Judges, and REEVES, * District Judge.

Opinion

JILL PRYOR, Circuit Judge:

Jyll Brink appeals the district court's dismissal of her putative class action complaint. She argues that the district court erred in determining that her state law claims for negligence and breach of contract against Raymond James and Associates, Inc. ("RJA") were precluded under Title I of the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 ("SLUSA"), which prohibits class actions alleging state law causes of action based on conduct that constitutes federal securities fraud. Specifically, she disputes that her complaint alleged that RJA made a "misrepresentation ... of a material fact in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security." 15 U.S.C. § 78bb\(f\)\(1\)\(A\). After careful review, we reverse the district court's order and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

I. BACKGROUND¹

[1] As an alternative to a traditional commission-based investment account, RJA offered a "Passport Account" program that charged customers an annual advisory fee based on the total value of qualifying assets in the account instead of a commission based on each individual trade. In addition, Passport Account customers were charged a flat fee per transaction. In its written agreement with each Passport Account customer (the "Passport Agreement"), RJA described this flat fee as a "Processing Fee" for "transaction execution and clearing services" and stated that the Processing Fees were "not commissions." Compl. at 2 (Doc. 1).²

RJA published a schedule of the Processing Fees in the Passport Agreement. Before October 1, 2013, RJA's Processing Fees ranged from $30.00 to $50.00 per transaction, depending on the type of security. Beginning October 1, 2013, RJA reduced 1145 the Processing Fees to range from $9.95 to $30.00. But the actual costs incurred in the execution and clearing of the transactions were much lower than the Processing Fees charged, allegedly no more than $5.00 per transaction. RJA kept as profit any amount above the actual costs associated with transaction execution and clearing.

Brink filed this putative class action complaint alleging state law claims for breach of contract and negligence. Brink alleged that because Passport Account customers had agreed only to pay for "expenses incurred in facilitating the execution and clearing" of their trades, RJA's undisclosed profit built into the Processing Fees breached the Passport Agreement. Id. at 3. She also claimed that RJA breached its duty of care owed to its customers, which she alleged included a duty to charge customers a reasonable fee for its services.

After class certification discovery, Brink moved for class certification, and RJA moved for summary judgment. While both of those motions were still pending, RJA filed a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, arguing that Brink's state law claims were disguised claims for federal securities fraud. Thus, RJA claimed, Brink's putative class action was precluded under SLUSA. As relevant here, SLUSA provides:

No covered class action based upon the statutory or common law of any State or subdivision thereof may be maintained in any State or Federal court by any private party alleging—

(A) a misrepresentation or omission of a material fact in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security.

15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(1)(A). The district court concluded that Brink's claims were precluded because RJA's alleged conduct constituted "a misrepresentation or omission of a material fact in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security," id., and granted RJA's motion to dismiss. This is Brink's appeal.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

[2] "We review de novo ... the district court's conclusion that SLUSA precludes [a plaintiff] from bringing ... state law claims." Instituto de Prevision Militar v. Merrill Lynch, 546 F.3d 1340, 1344 (11th Cir. 2008).

III. DISCUSSION

[3] [4] Before addressing whether SLUSA precludes Brink's putative class action, we provide a brief background on the history and purpose of SLUSA. Federal law "broadly prohibits deception, misrepresentation, and fraud in connection with the purchase or sale of any security." Merrill Lynch v. Dabit, 547 U.S. 71, 78, 126 S.Ct. 1503, 164 L.Ed.2d 179 (2006) (internal quotation marks omitted). Almost half a century ago, the Supreme Court recognized an implied right of action for private citizens alleging federal securities fraud. See Superintendent of Ins. of N.Y. v. Bankers Life & Casualty Co., 404 U.S. 6, 13 & n.9, 92 S.Ct. 165, 30 L.Ed.2d 128 (1971). Concerned about "significant evidence of abuse in private securities lawsuits," H.R. Rep. No. 104-369, at 31 (1995) (Conf. Rep.), Congress later passed the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 ("PSLRA"), Pub. L. 104-67, 109 Stat. 737 (1995) (codified at 15 U.S.C. §§ 77z and 78u-4). To combat these "perceived abuses," the PSLRA implemented multiple reforms in the context of private federal securities fraud lawsuits, including "heightened pleading requirements" and limitations on "recoverable damages and attorney's fees." Dabit, 547 U.S. at 81, 126 S.Ct. 1503.

[5] Although the PSLRA apparently was effective in deterring nuisance "suits *1146 ... [based on] federal securities fraud class actions," it also "prompted at least some of the plaintiffs' bar to avoid the federal forum altogether." Id. at 82, 126 S.Ct. 1503. Troubled by the flood of cases being brought in state court, Congress enacted SLUSA to "stem this shift from Federal to State courts and prevent certain State private securities class action lawsuits alleging fraud from being used to frustrate the objectives" of the PSLRA. Id. (alterations adopted) (internal quotation marks omitted). To that end, SLUSA provides that "[n]o covered class action based upon the statutory or common law of any State ... may be maintained in any State or Federal court by any private party alleging ... a misrepresentation of a material fact in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security." 15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(1)(A).³

The question before us today is whether Brink's putative class action alleges that RJA made such a misrepresentation. If it does, then SLUSA precludes Brink's putative class action based on state law causes of action. If it does not, then SLUSA is inapplicable, and Brink's case may continue. We conclude that SLUSA does not prohibit Brink's putative class action because RJA's alleged failure to disclose the hidden profit built into the Processing Fee is not a misrepresentation of a material fact for purposes of SLUSA. Id.

A. Subject Matter Jurisdiction

As with any case, we first must address our jurisdiction. See Arbaugh v. Y & H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 514, 126 S.Ct. 1235, 163 L.Ed.2d 1097 (2006). The district court dismissed this case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction after concluding that SLUSA precluded Brink's claims. But this Court suggested in Riley v. Merrill Lynch that we analyze jurisdiction differently in SLUSA cases depending on whether a state law class action was filed directly in federal court in the first instance or was removed to federal court under SLUSA's removal provision.⁴ See 292 F.3d 1334, 1336-37 (11th Cir. 2002), abrogated on other grounds by Dabit, 547 U.S. at 89, 126 S.Ct. 1503. In the former circumstance, we must assess diversity jurisdiction before considering SLUSA preclusion.

In Riley, the trustees of the Performance Toyota, Inc. Profit Sharing Plan (“Performance Plan”) and the trustee of the Master Packaging, Inc. 401(k) plan (“Master Packaging”) filed a class action lawsuit against Merrill Lynch in federal court alleging violations of two Florida statutes. The plaintiffs argued that Merrill Lynch made material misrepresentations that induced the class members to purchase and retain shares of a certain fund. Id. at 1336. Merrill Lynch moved to dismiss, arguing that SLUSA barred the plaintiffs’ class action and that there was no diversity jurisdiction. Id. While that motion was pending, Performance Plan voluntarily dismissed and refiled in state court. Master Packaging maintained its claims in federal court. After Performance Plan refiled in state court, Merrill Lynch removed the case back to federal court, where it was consolidated again with the Master Packaging action. Id.

We analyzed Merrill Lynch’s motion to dismiss differently as to the two plaintiffs. *1147 As for Performance Plan’s claims, we reasoned that when a defendant removed a state law class action to federal court pursuant to SLUSA, and “SLUSA was the only basis for removal,” the first step of our jurisdictional analysis was to determine “whether SLUSA permitted removal from state to federal court.” Id. at 1337. This required “determin[ing] SLUSA’s applicability to” the action. Id. at 1340. We concluded that because SLUSA applied to and therefore barred Performance Plan’s claims, the district court properly dismissed those claims rather than remanding the action to state court. Id. at 1346.

Master Packaging’s claims, however, were filed “in diversity directly in federal court.” Id. at 1337. We therefore were “required to assess whether [diversity jurisdiction was present] before addressing the merits of its [state law] claims and before determining whether SLUSA barred those claims.” Id. at 1336-37. If “diversity was lacking ..., this determination eliminate[d] the need to reach the SLUSA question.” Id. at 1339-40.

Here, Brink filed suit directly in federal court. The district court thus should have determined whether diversity jurisdiction was present before considering SLUSA preclusion. Following Riley’s approach, we assess diversity jurisdiction before deciding whether SLUSA applies. Because diversity jurisdiction has been properly pled in this case, we proceed to consider the SLUSA preclusion issue.⁵

B. SLUSA Preclusion

[6] [7] [8] SLUSA precludes “covered class action[s]” based on state law causes of action that allege “a misrepresentation or omission of a material fact in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security.” 15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(1)(A). It is undisputed that Brink’s putative state law class action is a “covered” one and that the securities at issue are covered securities.⁶ We thus must determine whether the conduct alleged in Brink’s complaint—that RJA built a profit into the Processing Fee while representing to its Passport Account customers that the Processing Fee covered only the actual costs of transaction execution and clearing—constitutes a “misrepresentation or omission of a material fact in connection with the purchase or sale” of those securities, despite Brink having pled claims for breach of contract and negligence. See Behlen v. Merrill Lynch, 311 F.3d 1087, 1090, 1094 (11th Cir. 2002) (determining that although the plaintiff had alleged breach of contract, it was “clear that the crux of the complaint was that the defendants either misrepresented or omitted crucial facts about the ... shares, thus causing him and the class to invest in inappropriate securities”). As Brink does *1148 not dispute that her breach of contract and negligence claims are in fact claims about RJA’s misrepresentation regarding the Processing Fee, we begin our analysis of whether the alleged misrepresentation was material.

[9] [10] Materiality has special meaning in the context of federal securities fraud, as well as in SLUSA.⁷ The Supreme Court has explained that materiality in federal securities law requires a “substantial likelihood that the disclosure of the omitted fact would have been viewed by the reasonable investor as having significantly altered the total mix of information made available.” Basic Inc. v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224, 231-32, 108 S.Ct. 978, 99 L.Ed.2d 194 (1988) (internal quotation marks omitted).⁸ Thus, as RJA concedes, for SLUSA to preclude a state law class action the misrepresentation must “make[] a significant difference to someone’s decision to purchase or to sell a covered security.” Appellee’s Br. at 26 (quoting Chadbourne & Parke LLP v. Troice, 571 U.S. 377, 134 S.Ct. 1058, 1066, 188 L.Ed.2d 88 (2014)).

Applying this standard, we have concluded that a misrepresentation that would only influence an individual's choice of broker is not "material" for federal securities fraud actions brought under § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5. See SEC v. Goble, 682 F.3d 934 (11th Cir. 2012). As we explained in Goble:

This court has said that the test for materiality in the securities fraud context is whether a reasonable man would attach importance to the fact misrepresented or omitted in determining his course of action. We understand this "course of action" to mean an investment decision—not an individual's choice of broker-dealers. ... We hold that a misrepresentation that would only influence an individual's choice of broker-dealers cannot form the basis for § 10(b) securities fraud liability.

Id. at 943-44 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

Following this reasoning, the choice of a type of investment account, much like the *1149 choice of a broker-dealer, is not intrinsic to the investment decision itself. Although RJA's alleged misrepresentation regarding the Processing Fee might have influenced a reasonable investor's decision to pick the Passport Account over another type of account, that does not make the alleged representation "material" under SLUSA.

Importantly, RJA did not "mislead [its] customers as to what portion of the total transaction cost was going toward purchasing securities versus the cost of the broker's involvement." United States v. Litvak, 808 F.3d 160, 176 (2d Cir. 2015). Further, Passport Account customers chose to trade securities with full knowledge of the amount of the Processing Fee for each trade and never paid more than they agreed. We do not believe that a reasonable investor would have made different investment decisions had she known that some of the Processing Fee—a fee she had agreed to pay and presumably had included in her cost-benefit calculation before making each trade—included profit for RJA instead of merely covering the transaction execution and clearing costs.

We find it persuasive that two other circuits likewise have determined that a hidden profit on a processing or transaction fee is not material under federal securities law. In a Second Circuit case, investors alleged that a brokerage firm charged hidden commissions on transactions, labeled as "transaction fees" on the transaction confirmation slips. Feinman v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 84 F.3d 539, 540 (2d Cir. 1996).⁹ The Second Circuit held that the alleged conduct did not constitute federal securities fraud because the misrepresentation was not material as a matter of law: "Simply stated, reasonable minds could not find that an individual investing in the stock market would be affected in a decision to purchase or sell a security by knowledge that the broker was pocketing a dollar or two of the fee charged for the transaction." Id. at 541. Similarly, the Seventh Circuit has held that SLUSA did not preclude a state law breach of contract claim where the allegation was that the broker-dealer "improperly inflated the [handling, postage and insurance fee] to include a profit" because the inflated fee was "not objectively material to ... any class members' investment decisions." Appert v. Morgan Stanley Dean Witter, Inc., 673 F.3d 609, 617 (7th Cir. 2012).

RJA argues that Feinman and Appert are distinguishable because the alleged hidden profit built into the Processing Fee in this case is much higher than the charges in those two cases. We are unconvinced. Here, it is true that the alleged undisclosed profit is more than "a dollar or two," but this is a distinction without a difference: Brink, just like the plaintiffs in Feinman and Appert, knew how much she was being charged for costs associated with each transaction and was never charged more than she agreed to pay. It is the nature of the fees, not their amount, that renders the misrepresentation immaterial as a matter of law.

Here, RJA's alleged undisclosed profit on the Processing Fee for each transaction—a fee for transaction execution and clearing, known and agreed to in advance by Passport Account customers—objectively could not make a significant difference to a reasonable investor's decision to purchase or sell a covered security. As the court in Feinman noted, "[i]f brokerage firms are slightly inflating the cost of their transaction fees, the remedy is competition *1150 among the firms in the labeling and pricing of their services, not resort to the securities fraud provisions." 84 F.3d at 541. The conduct alleged in Brink's complaint is therefore not "a misrepresentation or omission of a material fact in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security." 15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(1)(A) (emphasis added). Because we conclude that the alleged misrepresentation was not material, we do not consider whether it was made "in connection with" the purchase or sale of covered securities.¹⁰ SLUSA does not preclude Brink's putative class action.

IV. CONCLUSION

Footnotes

- * Honorable Danny C. Reeves, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Kentucky, sitting by designation.
- 1 At the motion to dismiss stage, we accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, here, Brink. Chaparro v. Carnival Corp., 693 F.3d 1333, 1335 (11th Cir. 2012).
- 2 Unless otherwise specified, all citations in the form of "Doc. #" refer to the district court docket entries.
- 3 SLUSA also precludes covered class actions alleging "that the defendant used or employed any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security," 15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(1)(B), but neither party suggests that this provision is at issue here.
- 4 "Any covered class action brought in any State court involving a covered security ... shall be removable to the Federal district court ... and shall be subject to [SLUSA's preclusion provision]." 15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(2).
- 5 Before oral argument, Brink moved to amend her complaint to correct her jurisdictional allegations. That motion was previously denied as unnecessary. We sua sponte reconsider, and the motion is GRANTED. As amended, Brink's complaint adequately alleges diversity of citizenship. See Lowery v. Ala. Power Co., 483 F.3d 1184, 1193 n.24 (11th Cir. 2007) (explaining that the Class Action Fairness Act modified the diversity requirement for certain class actions so that "only one member of the plaintiff class—named or unnamed—must be diverse from any one defendant"). Although Brink fails to identify a diverse class member, at this stage of the proceedings there is no class action nor any class members. Her allegations are sufficient because she has shown that there is a "foreseeable possibility" that there will be a diverse class member upon class certification. Clausnitzer v. Federal Exp. Corp., 621 F.Supp.2d 1266, 1270 (S. D. Fla. 2008).
- 6 "A 'covered class action' is a lawsuit in which damages are sought on behalf of more than 50 people. A 'covered security' is one traded nationally and listed on a regulated national exchange." Dabit, 547 U.S. at 83, 126 S.Ct. 1503.
- 7 We conclude that it is appropriate to look to the meaning of materiality in securities fraud cases brought under § 10(b) and Rule 10-5 to understand SLUSA's materiality requirement. See Appert v. Morgan Stanley Dean Witter, Inc., 673 F.3d 609, 616 (7th Cir. 2012) ("The language in SLUSA is similar to that in § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 and there is no basis to construe 'materiality' differently under these provisions."); cf. Instituto de Prevision Militar, 546 F.3d at 1348 (explaining that SLUSA's "in connection with the purchase or sale" language "covers the same range of activities that the SEC could prosecute as violations of § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5"). The Supreme Court has explained that when Congress used language in SLUSA "identical" to the language used in § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5, it intended for that language to have "the same meaning" in both contexts. See Dabit, 547 U.S. at 85-86, 126 S.Ct. 1503 (construing the phrase "in connection with the purchase or sale" of securities in SLUSA to have the same meaning as the identical language used in § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5).
- 8 RJA argues that federal securities fraud cases brought by private plaintiffs, such as Basic Inc., are inapplicable because the Supreme Court held in Dabit that SLUSA preclusion, like § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5, sweeps more broadly than the judicially created private right of action for federal securities fraud. But Dabit concerned the identity of the plaintiffs, not the materiality of the misrepresentations. Id. at 84, 89, 126 S.Ct. 1503. Since Dabit, the Supreme Court has relied on private securities fraud cases to inform its interpretation of the phrase "material fact in connection with the purchase or sale" in SLUSA. See Chadbourne & Parke LLP v. Troice, 571 U.S. 377, 134 S.Ct. 1058, 1066, 188 L.Ed.2d 88 (2014) (relying on Matrixx Initiatives, Inc. v. Siracusano, 563 U.S. 27, 131 S.Ct. 1309, 179 L.Ed.2d 398 (2011), a private securities

We reverse the order of the district court dismissing this case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and remand the case to the district court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

All Citations

892 F.3d 1142, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P 100,111, 27 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 967

fraud class action, for the definition of material in SLUSA). We thus conclude it is appropriate to look to the treatment of materiality in such cases.

9 RJA insists that Feinman is “wholly inapplicable because it was decided prior to SLUSA’s enactment.” Appellee’s Br. at 27. But Feinman construed the materiality requirement under federal securities law, which, as we explained in the previous footnotes, sheds light on materiality for SLUSA purposes.

10 RJA relies on four out-of-circuit cases in support of its argument that SLUSA bars Brink’s claims. See Zola v. TD Ameritrade, Inc., 889 F.3d 920 (8th Cir. 2018); Dommert v. Raymond James Fin. Servs., Inc., No. CIV A 1:06-CV-102, 2007 WL 1018234 (E.D. Tex. Mar. 29, 2007); Broadhead v. Goldman Sachs, No. 2:06CV009, 2007 WL 951623 (E.D. Tex. Mar. 26, 2007); Lewis v. Scottrade, Inc., 204 F.Supp.3d 1064 (E.D. Mo. 2016). Of course, we are not bound by these decisions. But we also note that the material facts of each case are distinguishable from the allegations before us. Indeed, in those cases the plaintiffs alleged that the broker had “manipulate[d] the price of the securities,” Zola, 889 F.3d at 924, charged fees that “misle[]d [its] customers as to what portion of the total transaction cost was going toward purchasing securities,” Litvak, 808 F.3d at 176, or received undisclosed kickbacks and incentives, creating a conflict of interest. For example, in Zola, the defendant’s alleged conduct “enabled high-frequency traders to manipulate the price of the securities, to the detriment of the plaintiffs.” 889 F.3d at 924. In Dommert, the defendants allegedly “failed to disclose important information … about fees and financial gain” and “established a system wrought with conflicts of interest in the form of undisclosed financial incentives.” 2007 WL 1018234, at *2, *8 (internal quotation marks omitted). In Broadhead, the allegations were that the defendants “add[ed] extra amounts … to certain bond purchase prices[,] … subtract[ed] certain amounts … from bond sales prices,” and failed disclose the mark ups and mark downs to customers, providing statements that “only reflect[ed] a net selling or purchase price.” 2007 WL 951623, at *1. And in Lewis, the defendant allegedly failed to disclose that it routed its customers’ trades to trading venues that offered the biggest kickbacks to the broker, at the expense of its customers obtaining a more advantageous price. 204 F.Supp.3d at 1066, 1068.

End of Document

© 2018 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.